The screenshot shows a thread of tweets from the World Health Organization (WHO) dated August 17, 2020. The tweets discuss the humanitarian crisis in Tigray, Ethiopia, and the impact of the drought. Key points from the tweets include:

- "In the Ethiopian made catastrophe, 1 million people who have been under siege from this, sealed off from the outside world, with no access to food, water, and very limited electricity & fuel." - @DrTedros
- "As a result, the people are suffering from diseases such as cholera, diphtheria, and measles. The only solution is to restore access to food, water, and electricity." - @DrTedros
- "A delegation from the United States, United Kingdom, and other countries visited #Tigray in an effort to facilitate the restoration of electricity, telecom services is essential for peace talks." - @DrTedros
- "In the Greater Horn of Africa, millions of people are facing disease, drought, and increasing prices for food, fuel and fertilizer to lack of access to sufficient food." - @DrTedros

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Aug. 17, 2022

Somali, U.S. forces engage insurgents in support of the Federal Government of Somalia

In coordination with the Federal Government of Somalia, U.S. Africa Command conducted an airstrike against al-Shabaab terrorists that were actively attacking Somali National Army forces in a remote location near Teedaan, Somalia, Aug. 14.

The command's initial assessment is that the strikes killed 13 al-Shabaab terrorists and that no civilians were injured or killed. U.S. forces are authorized to conduct strikes in defense of designated partner forces.

The Federal Government of Somalia and U.S. Africa Command take great measures to prevent civilian casualties. These efforts contrast with the indiscriminate attacks that al-Shabaab regularly conducts against the civilian population.

The Federal Government of Somalia and the U.S. remain committed to fighting al-Shabaab to prevent the deaths of innocent civilians.

Violent extremist organizations like al-Shabaab present long-term threats to Somali, regional and U.S. interests.

Hands that are Greening a Nation: While much still remains, there is no shred of doubt that the Green Legacy Initiative has delivered results, the most important of which is a 'green culture'.

If global events in the past weeks have not convinced us that climate change is happening, then nothing else can. Across the globe, countries have been confronted with extreme weather conditions, flooding, wildfires, powerful storms, unprecedented heat waves, increased desertification and many other phenomena. We are observing the frequency and intensity of such dramatic events impacting people's livelihoods and well-being all around the world. In our own backyard, the East African and Horn of Africa's unprecedented climate change related drought, at times, made checks being conducted to bring up water sources and caused severe droughts in some parts of the country.

While the climate change discourse has evolved over many years, today as a global community, we have reached a critical point where we are using the widely shared recognition and consensus, addressing the climate change challenge requires long-term action. It takes conventional and innovative approaches at all levels of society. Perhaps, the most defining moment where Ethiopia has been successful in rebuilding at every level.

When in 2019 we announced the Green Legacy Initiative, we launched with the aspiration of positively impacting basic development, increasing forest cover, expanding agroforestry, enabling job creation and enhancing urban greening. Every corner of the great nation took up the national call to plant 10 billion seedlings in a four-year period. More than 20 million Ethiopians across the country rolled up their sleeves and showed us to prepare seedlings, dig pits, plant and then nurture them to survival and growth.

Each year we supported the national target and together with the first year of the four-year challenge, Ethiopia has planted 25 billion seedlings of agroforestry, forestry, ornamental varieties, transforming the landscape green. Since its start in 2020, there has been over 100 million green trees in 100 of our yards, planted in 100,000 schools in the role of deforestation and the formation of new forests. These new forests will be essential in carbon sequestration as Ethiopia begins efforts to tackle climate change.

Scientific evidence emerging over the last 100 years has demonstrated the ways in which carbon, including carbon dioxide, traps heat. Human activities have accelerated the release of carbon dioxide into earth's atmosphere. Further increasing the heat that has been trapping, which is a weather phenomenon. We now know that rapid climate change is contributing to the rise of global temperatures, requires extreme natural events, rising sea levels and many other consequences. Unfortunately, the African continent has had to do in terms of facing a net-emission of greenhouse gases, yet experiences the harsh effects, in tandem with other climate change, adaptation and mitigation strategies, other African countries can take Ethiopia's Green Legacy Initiative as a best practice.

There are many ingredients to our success as there are lessons derived from the Green Legacy Initiative within the four-year period since we began. For example, when the massive tree-planting program was launched in 2020, there were over 100,000 nurseries established with very low production capacity. In the current year - 2023, the number of nurseries in Ethiopia surpassed 122,000, with a cumulative capacity of producing 7.6 billion seedlings of various species.

Having the Green Legacy Initiative as a best practice across the continent and beyond is a noble ambition.

A second example is the progressive change introduced by the 400 sites in improvement of education and infrastructure, including early learning, which has facilitated early planting. This year for instance, around 1.8 million ha of land has been identified for planting, of which more than 300,000 ha is government-owned. A key indicator for our success, however, is public will and demonstrable commitment at all levels of leadership.

While much still remains, there is no shred of doubt that the Green Legacy Initiative has delivered results, the most important of which is a 'green culture'. We have no doubt that this new culture will be a legacy preserved for Ethiopia's future generations. Many cities throughout the country are now being considered as the need to restore green spaces and enhance forest cover in residential areas. We could not have been able to ignite this consciousness without the great participation from the communities of 100 million of citizens for whom success in the nation has been a paramount importance. Beyond the new culture being shaped, the Green Legacy Initiative has thus far directly created more than 702,000 jobs, mostly for women and youth, as part of a green economy building phase.

Ethiopia is still a developing nation with an eager youth population, great ambition and untapped potential. In a fast-changing global environment, we recognize that our growth needs to be environmentally sustainable, climate-resilient and anchored in principles of green growth. While our tree-planting endeavor is one means of supporting urban centers, we are also confident that much effort will need to be put into having cutting-edge of all fronts for use as forward in our construction, healthcare, Ethiopia's investments in renewable energy from hydroelectric, wind, solar and geothermal sources will soon realize this. Now therefore, there is no doubt that future generations will rise to speak we are coming today through the Green Legacy Initiative.

It is my call and that of Ethiopia's that other African countries and the global community in general, initiate such practical actions as a means of collectively tackling the adverse effects of climate change. I appeal my African counterparts to work with us in planting a new solution, that is essential in confronting our common problems.

My God Bless Ethiopia and her Children!

I prefer green beans & celery

I enjoy green tea hot or cold

Most of all, I enjoy sitting on the green grass

Under the big green oak/eucalyptus tree. (My doggerel for tree.)

Hug a tree 🌿🌳🍷🌲❤️ today! 😊

Yep! let's set the record straight: US sanctions apply to shipping companies transporting food& fertilizer, banks processing payment & countries making purchases. Who ya kiddin? We're born yesterday but not last night! Period!

United States government official

Let me set the record straight about a regular piece of disinformation: America's sanctions do not apply to Russian food and fertilizer exports. Period.
